

BONDS

E. M. CAMPBELL & CO.

JULY INVESTMENTS

$500 United States, 1908	35
$2,000 Vigo County, Ind.	55
$3,000 Worthington, Ind.	45
$4,000 United States, 1907	45
$4,000 Goodland, Ind.	45
$5,000 Parke Co., Ind.	55
$5,000 South Bend, Ind.	35
$6,000 Bartholomew Co., Ind.	45
$6,000 Mt. Vernon, Ind.	45
$7,000 Pulaski Co., Ind.	65
$8,000 Oakland City, Ind.	45
$10,000 U. S. Steel Co.	55
$11,000 Winchester, Ind.	45
$11,000 Greene Co., Ind.	45
$15,000 Warsaw, Ind.	45
$15,000 Battery Realty Co., N.Y.	55
$20,000 United Railways, Detroit	45
1st mg.	45
$20,000 Mer. Heat & Light Co.	55
$25,000 Warren Co., Ind.	65
$26,000 Peru, Ind.	55
$28,000 Col., Del. & Mar., O., Ry.	55
$50,000 Cin., Indpls. St. Louis	45
Chicago 1st mg.	45
$50,000 Louisville Sub'n Ry. Co.	55
$76,000 Knox Co., Ind.	45

E. M. CAMPBELL & CO.

14 & 16 East Washington St.

BONDS

BURGLARS

Are you going away for the summer? Leave your premises without protection? Get a BURGLAR POLICY in the Fidelity and Casualty Company, of New York, and enjoy your vacation. Costs less than 2 cents a day for $1,000, covering all your household effects. More than 12,000 burglaries in cities of 20,000 and over last year.

DON'T DELAY. Call us up by Phone for particulars.

C. F. SAYLES & CO.

Real Estate, Loans and Insurance

127 East Market St. Old 476 New 906

Geo. M. Cobb & Co.

FIRE and LIABILITY

INSURANCE

239 Newton Claypool Building

FOUGHT ON THE STREET

ONE MAN KILLED AND THREE PROBABLY MORTALLY WOUNDED.

Missouri Sheriff Attempted to Arrest a Young Man and Desperate Shooting Affair Resulted.

STEELEVILLE, Mo., July 4.—One dead and three perhaps fatally injured in the result of a fight with revolvers which took place here this afternoon between Sheriff W. R. Taft, of Crawford county, his deputy, Perry Ives, Deputy Marshal John Woods, Robert Starks, a farmer, and his son Hirschel, aged twenty-three years. Robert Starks was shot through the head, his death resulting instantly. W. R. Taft, the sheriff, was shot through the stomach and will die. Hirschel Starks was fatally shot and Perry Ives, deputy sheriff, was shot in the mouth and leg.

The trouble originated in the refusal of young Starks to submit to arrest. He was charged with having offended the daughter of Benjamin Ogles, a wealthy farmer, who filed a complaint against him. When Sheriff Taft approached, Starks warned him away, saying there would be trouble if he attempted to take him into custody. Robert Starks came up at that moment and after learning that his son was about to be arrested, he turned home, where he procured a revolver. He returned to the Crawford County Bank building, where the sheriff and his son were standing.

"Here, take this," said the elder Starks to his son, "and if Taft don't leave you alone, you know how to protect yourself."

The sheriff tried to argue with the elder Starks, but to no purpose. He then took Hirschel by the arm and as he did so the prisoner fired. One of the bullets struck Taft in the stomach and he sank unconscious to the ground.

Deputy Sheriff Ives, who was attracted by the shooting, ran up the street with a revolver in hand and opened fire as he saw young Starks brandishing his weapon. Hirschel Starks fell to the ground and the latter was shot twice, the first bullet taking effect in his mouth, the other lodging in the right leg. City officers arrived to the rescue of the officers at this point. A few moments later the elder Starks fell dead with a bullet through the heart. It is believed that Deputy Sheriff Ives is the only one of the four shot who has any chance to recover.

The shooting occurred on one of the principal streets and the little town was thrown into a state of excitement. Steeleville, Mo., is sixty miles from St. Louis, on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad.

Chief Justice Fuller Sails.

NEW YORK, July 4.—Among the passengers sailing for Europe to-day on the Kronland were Chief Justice William Fuller, his wife and daughter, and Mrs. Leslie M. Shaw, wife of the secretary of the treasury, and daughters.

The Oldest Carriage Repository in the State Moves to a New Location.

Perhaps the oldest carriage house in Indiana is the one that was established on the "Governor's Circle" some time before the civil war. This building has been occupied as a vehicle repository continually since its erection, nearly forty years ago. And for the first time since its existence, it is now vacant. The building was vacated by H. T. Henshaw, who has been in the business for many years. The company's capacity to accommodate their large-increased business is now being increased.

Henshaw Vehicle Company are now located in their new three-story building on Market street. This building has been occupied as a vehicle repository continually since its erection, nearly forty years ago. And for the first time since its existence, it is now vacant. The building was vacated by H. T. Henshaw, who has been in the business for many years. The company's capacity to accommodate their large-increased business is now being increased.

Henshaw Vehicle Company occupies the entire new building, which is three stories and a basement, 20 feet wide and forty-two feet wide, and they claim to have the largest vehicle repository in the State of Indiana. Their floor is already covered with a full line of the most beautiful carriages and automobiles ever exhibited in this city. They also carry a full line of bicycles and harness and all accessories pertaining to the vehicle business. Their main door, which is exceedingly well lighted, is by a full plate glass front and numerous side windows, is very pleasing to the eye of all lovers of the automobile.

Henshaw Vehicle Company is to be congratulated on their good judgment in selecting such a desirable location for such a handsome building for their repository, which is to be erected shortly directly opposite, it will make that section a very lively one.

Henshaw Vehicle Company occupies the entire new building, which is three stories and a basement, 20 feet wide and forty-two feet wide, and they claim to have the largest vehicle repository in the State of Indiana. Their floor is already covered with a full line of the most beautiful carriages and automobiles ever exhibited in this city. They also carry a full line of bicycles and harness and all accessories pertaining to the vehicle business. Their main door, which is exceedingly well lighted, is by a full plate glass front and numerous side windows, is very pleasing to the eye of all lovers of the automobile.

Henshaw Vehicle Company is to be congratulated on their good judgment in selecting such a desirable location for such a handsome building for their repository, which is to be erected shortly directly opposite, it will make that section a very lively one.

Henshaw Vehicle Company occupies the entire new building, which is three stories and a basement, 20 feet wide and forty-two feet wide, and they claim to have the largest vehicle repository in the State of Indiana. Their floor is already covered with a full line of the most beautiful carriages and automobiles ever exhibited in this city. They also carry a full line of bicycles and harness and all accessories pertaining to the vehicle business. Their main door, which is exceedingly well lighted, is by a full plate glass front and numerous side windows, is very pleasing to the eye of all lovers of the automobile.

Henshaw Vehicle Company is to be congratulated on their good judgment in selecting such a desirable location for such a handsome building for their repository, which is to be erected shortly directly opposite, it will make that section a very lively one.

Henshaw Vehicle Company occupies the entire new building, which is three stories and a basement, 20 feet wide and forty-two feet wide, and they claim to have the largest vehicle repository in the State of Indiana. Their floor is already covered with a full line of the most beautiful carriages and automobiles ever exhibited in this city. They also carry a full line of bicycles and harness and all accessories pertaining to the vehicle business. Their main door, which is exceedingly well lighted, is by a full plate glass front and numerous side windows, is very pleasing to the eye of all lovers of the automobile.

Henshaw Vehicle Company is to be congratulated on their good judgment in selecting such a desirable location for such a handsome building for their repository, which is to be erected shortly directly opposite, it will make that section a very lively one.

Henshaw Vehicle Company occupies the entire new building, which is three stories and a basement, 20 feet wide and forty-two feet wide, and they claim to have the largest vehicle repository in the State of Indiana. Their floor is already covered with a full line of the most beautiful carriages and automobiles ever exhibited in this city. They also carry a full line of bicycles and harness and all accessories pertaining to the vehicle business. Their main door, which is exceedingly well lighted, is by a full plate glass front and numerous side windows, is very pleasing to the eye of all lovers of the automobile.

Henshaw Vehicle Company is to be congratulated on their good judgment in selecting such a desirable location for such a handsome building for their repository, which is to be erected shortly directly opposite, it will make that section a very lively one.

Henshaw Vehicle Company occupies the entire new building, which is three stories and a basement, 20 feet wide and forty-two feet wide, and they claim to have the largest vehicle repository in the State of Indiana. Their floor is already covered with a full line of the most beautiful carriages and automobiles ever exhibited in this city. They also carry a full line of bicycles and harness and all accessories pertaining to the vehicle business. Their main door, which is exceedingly well lighted, is by a full plate glass front and numerous side windows, is very pleasing to the eye of all lovers of the automobile.

Henshaw Vehicle Company is to be congratulated on their good judgment in selecting such a desirable location for such a handsome building for their repository, which is to be erected shortly directly opposite, it will make that section a very lively one.

Henshaw Vehicle Company occupies the entire new building, which is three stories and a basement, 20 feet wide and forty-two feet wide, and they claim to have the largest vehicle repository in the State of Indiana. Their floor is already covered with a full line of the most beautiful carriages and automobiles ever exhibited in this city. They also carry a full line of bicycles and harness and all accessories pertaining to the vehicle business. Their main door, which is exceedingly well lighted, is by a full plate glass front and numerous side windows, is very pleasing to the eye of all lovers of the automobile.

Henshaw Vehicle Company is to be congratulated on their good judgment in selecting such a desirable location for such a handsome building for their repository, which is to be erected shortly directly opposite, it will make that section a very lively one.

Henshaw Vehicle Company occupies the entire new building, which is three stories and a basement, 20 feet wide and forty-two feet wide, and they claim to have the largest vehicle repository in the State of Indiana. Their floor is already covered with a full line of the most beautiful carriages and automobiles ever exhibited in this city. They also carry a full line of bicycles and harness and all accessories pertaining to the vehicle business. Their main door, which is exceedingly well lighted, is by a full plate glass front and numerous side windows, is very pleasing to the eye of all lovers of the automobile.

WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON CELEBRATES THE NATION'S DAY OF INDEPENDENCE.

Noteworthy Addresses Delivered by the French Ambassador, M. Jusserand, and Secretary Moody.

TOWNE'S SPEECH TO TAMMANY

DIATRIBE AGAINST IMPERIALISM AS A CAUSE OF CORRUPTION.

Mayor Tom Johnson Speaks of Municipal Affairs on Bryan's Farm—Observances Elsewhere.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—The government to-day joined with the citizens of the District of Columbia in a general commemoration of Independence day. The features of the celebration were a military procession in which all arms of the regular service—army, navy and marine corps—were represented, with the National Guard of the District, and a public meeting in which Admiral Dewey, Secretary of the Navy Moody and M. Jusserand, the French ambassador, participated. The parade was witnessed by large crowds and was led by Gen. S. M. B. Young, the grand marshal.

The public meeting immediately followed under the shadow of the great trees in the northeast lawn of the White House. The exercises were opened by District Commissioner N. B. F. McFarland, who presided. He introduced Admiral Dewey, who in turn introduced Harry B. Harkness, who read the Declaration of Independence. Mr. McFarland then spoke briefly on behalf of the District government, under whose auspices the day was celebrated, and was followed by Ambassador Jusserand, whose speech contained an eloquent tribute to the Americans of the early days. Briefly he referred to the celebration of 1776, and in Independence Hall in Philadelphia. He continued: "What took place? What words were exchanged? We should like to know them to the minutest particulars. But one thing we know and that is enough—the men who came were insurgents; the men who left were free men."

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

Secretary of the Navy Moody spoke for the national government. He extended cordial welcome to the French ambassador and reminded his hearers that without the cooperation of the French fleet under De Grasse, the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown, which virtually determined the independence of the country, would never have been won. He spoke of the equality of all men before the law and held that the laws which are enforced equally and against all should be respected by all. The remedy for the law and in the courts which represent the majesty of the people's will. Any departure from the honest and true spirit of the land is a contempt, not only of the courts themselves, but of the people who are the basis of the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Moody touched upon the necessity of honesty in the public service. He said that the country is not a body politic so subtle, so powerful, so dangerous, so fatal as the corrupt behavior of its public men. He said that the great or small, he could not believe, he said, that in the main those who do the people's work are honest and true. But when the malignant ulcer of corruption appears, it is no time for surface treatment. The disease must be cut out, and a very poisonous root that each may be cut out and cast away.

Mr. Jusserand then alluded to the help which France was willingly rendered to the new-born republic in its struggle for freedom. Congress had decided that an appeal should be made to the foreign nations for an alliance. "Amid the silence of the nations, one voice," said M. Jusserand, "was heard to say: 'Adieu—the voice of France. Here I am willing and ready to risk with you for better or for worse all I have, life and treasure, what remains of my colonies and even that new built navy of mine, the result of so many efforts, a navy just constructed, at last, after eighty years of indifference and decay.'"

WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON CELEBRATES THE NATION'S DAY OF INDEPENDENCE.

Noteworthy Addresses Delivered by the French Ambassador, M. Jusserand, and Secretary Moody.